Tasting Notes

In the glass, it is truly an old-fashioned Talha white wine with its dark yellow amber color.

In the nose, its complexity makes you travel in time to experience the Talha white wines drunk fifty years ago or more in Alentejo, without the fruity notes that can be obtained with the modern Oenology, but with a strong identity, proper of the type of vinification in clay.

On the palate it shows, once again, its noble rusticity, where it emphasize the beautiful acidity, some astringency and body more than enough to pair with any traditional Alentejo dish.

With just 12%, alcohol volume, like the wines of the past, could well be a second-century wine, exported to the Empire capital and enjoyed by the upper classes.

It was made with total respect for the most traditional winemaking technique of Alentejo and, therefore, does not aim to satisfy the "markets" or follow the trends of the moment.
